I'm concerned that populous areas such as Loughton might end up with reduced representation, at the expense of much less populated villages. Instead, for example, Lambourne could be combined into the Passingford ward, and the result would still have a lower electorate than some of the wards in the towns. While some boundary adjustment seems necessary, the overall effect on each parish's representation must be accounted for. The consultation would make more sense if the reasoning for the change was actually given.
