Comment text:

Leatherhead North should have at least one more councillor to put on a par with more rural constituencies. Furthermore, areas of significant urban growth typically have a higher need of municipal interventions and resources. It seems that rural areas enjoy better representation on the council. Where local counsellors are representing an area on their own they get to fight once every few years as an established individual. Where multiple counsellors are in one area they are typically having elections on a much quicker cycle whereby it is less personal and more political. If multiple rural areas in South Moor Valley were combined then maybe North mole Valley would not consistently carry the burden of increased housing and reduced municipal intervention.
