Has no-one realized that there is a hill between Ladies Mile Road and Mackie Avenue? No point just looking at a map. Communities have been formed over the decades as Brighton grew. Patcham has always included Mackie Avenue and all roads leading therefrom. From the Warmdene Avenue junction with Carden Avenue up to the extreme eastern end of Carden Avenue, there is no direct route to Mackie Avenue. In fact there is a large green hill between the two and one has to travel by car or bus to connect those two areas despite it being only half a mile or so as the crow flies over the hills on a two dimensional map. It follows that there a limited community connection between the Mackie area and the Carden Avenue area. Surely, if it is considered REALLY necessary to divide the areas, then the eastern part of Ladies Mile Road from the Winfield Avenue/Mackie Avenue crossroads should be the obvious choice. Everything north of there should be in Patcham and included in the Patcham/Withdean area and not the Hollingbury and Carden area. On that point, the A23 trunk Road divides Withdean and Patcham. There is no community connection and both areas have their own social gatherings. The sports stadium is used by people from all over Brighton. Basically, Patcham is easy to define. Everything East of the A23.from the Carden Avenue Junction to the Pylons and north of Carden Avenue up to the A27 by-pass. Quite an acreage and a large community spirited area which is not shared with Withdean or Hollingbury. Why of earth change it?
