I strongly object to Patcham being spit into two so as to include a substantial amount of Patcham properties into Hollingbury. Patcham is a distinct community and an extended village with its own features and characteristics. Patcham was a villlage under East Sussex with its administration centre in Lewes. In 1928 Patcham became part of Brighton as did the Village of Rottingdean. My parents lived in Patcham ([REDACTED]) and for many I years worked out of the G.P. surgery in Warmdene Road also in Patcham. My daughter attended the White House nursery school in Ladies Mile Road again in Patcham. Patcham is an extended village much the same as Rottingdean. Hollingbury is a 50s built estate and has no connection with Patcham. I've looked at the proposed boundary which is utter nonsense and is unrecognisable as having ever been seen before. People living in the roads I have mentioned above will be horrified to think they are no long living in Patcham . When I was Mayor 2015-2016 I attended many events in Patcham During this period as with all my other links mentioned in this submission, I was able to enjoy and recognise the distinct community of Patcham. I note the proposed ward names are suggested as Hollingbury- Carden or Hollingbury-Ladies Mile. These names are street names not distinct ward areas. There are two a large schools in Ladies Mile Road which were built in the 1930's to serve the extension of Patcham Village. One is called Patcham Juniors and the other Patcham High School. Are we to change the names of these schools to serve those who wish to carve up Patcham in such a contrived manner ? I do note that the proposal skirts around the schools and in my view this has been done because they knew the school names would be an issue. Please don't agree to these changes.
