The Brighton draft proposals keep Patcham & Hollingbury as one ward which fits with the identity of the area and, if a change to ward boundaries is actually needed, I would support this change. I object to the further draft proposals as they split Patcham in two. The Westdene & Patcham ward doesn't include all of Patcham leaving some Patcham residents in a ward where the focus is Hollingbury and something called "Carden" which doesn't actually exist. The A23 is a boundary which naturally separates Westdene and Patcham, giving each area its own unique identity. It makes no sense to lump them together. Patcham and Hollingbury share similar local issues due to the road layout and geography of the area and it makes more sense to keep that as one ward.
