I currently live in the Patcham ward. It's currently divided along logical geographical lines, with the A27 demarcating the western boundary and the open land between Patcham/Hollingbury and Hollingdean/Stammer to the east. The further draft proposals join the two wards either side of the A27, which seems counter-intuitive, and adds a peculiar very arbitrary boundary through the middle of the village. The schools are currently in the middle of the ward - these new boundaries put the high school right on the boundary, which is ludicrous given it's catchment area. I object to the new boundary changes proposed in the strongest terms.
