Comment text:

I have been a Patcham resident for approximately 45 years and having looked at the proposals for the ward of Patcham, I fail to see a good reason to split it in two. Patcham has had a strong local identity and All Saints Church, originally built in Norman times, was a focal point for the medieval downland village. There are separate primary schools for Westdene, Patcham, and Carden cementing links to each suburb. Each individual area has its own local parade of shops and is served by largely separate bus routes, they each have individual branch libraries. I understand the need to "even out" numbers but feel it could be done without arbitrarily splitting Patcham in two.
