Patcham historically includes Mackie Avenue estate and research should have been done to understand how important it is to keep the original Patcham community geographically connected. There is a strong Patcham village feeling in this area and no residents living off Mackie Avenue feel that they are part of Hollingbury, especially as there is a steep wooded hill and nature reserve geographically splitting the two areas. There's only a tiny, overgrown, steep, barely used footpath to connect it to Hollingbury. I object to it being split up as suggested on this map.
