Comment text:

How dare you split an ancient area such as Patcham. All the areas of 'Brighton' have carried their names for millennia. Patcham was in existence (Saxon at least) long before Brighton came into being. Hollingbury is as old, if not older - it was an Iron Age camp with connections via the twittens through Patcham and Withdean. Westdene was just a fancy name given to the farmland of Withdean when the estate was created in the 50's. I was brought up in Westdene but went to school in Patcham. Therefore I consider Patcham as my home. Please leave us with our identity - Patcham is a village with a centre - the Mackie estate is joined to the village by minor roads and twittens. Hollingbury is a separate entity the other side of Carden Avenue. I want to vote for things in my area not be a small, separate part of another area.
