As a Patcham resident I strongly object to this ward proposal. Patcham is a historic community, unlike Westdean and other modern suburbs Eastwick bottom and Barn at Ladies mile got their names because they were dairy farms of Patcham. The buses to ladies mile all run through Patcham, Not Hollingbury both sides of Patcham people look to Brighton through the London road, whereas Westdean looks more to the dyke road, and Hollingbury to the Ditchling road - these are separate communities. the main school and library are right on the edge of the proposed split, while both sides tend to focus on the same amenities. This proposal is totally wrong in trying to split a village and community in half, this will have a detrimental affect on the residents of Patcham and I can't believe this idea has even been put forward when it means destroying a community.
