I live in Radcliffe-on-Trent. Some years ago, the village had three wards for Parish and Borough Council elections. I believe that these should be reinstated to make the choice of Councillors more democratic. I understand the need for the wards to be balanced in terms of numbers of voters but while additional houses have been, or are being built, in various parts of the village I feel that there should still be a reasonable balance between the wards. The old wards used the railway line to separate Malkin Ward from the other two and this should remain the case. The boundary between Dayncourt and Lamcote Wards would need to be placed to retain a balance of numbers between those two wards and Malkin Ward. A line along Cropwell Road from the village's southern edge to the railway station might be appropriate but accept that balancing the numbers is the important point. I am in favour of Upper Saxondale being removed from Radcliffe Parish. It has always been a relatively remote and disconnected community.
