How can dividing Southam, up into wards with Napton or Stockton be sensible. They are villages with very different needs & concerns Southam which thanks to the development is a growing town. The councillors would be split over having different issues, different people in different locations village to town. I understood the boundaries commissions recommends making wards address a cohesive group of people with similar interests. This suggestion goes directly against their guidance linking town to village in a ward. Southam ideally should be 1 large ward or perhaps 2 with a number of councillors elected for each ward. I think this is again Stratford district council officers having total disregard for the needs of the residents in this eastern part of the district supported by councillors who read biased briefs.
