I'm concerned with the way that High Brooms has been split, especially the way that St.Matthew's school has been split from the majority of the community that it serves, as well as its support network in the High Brooms community and St.Matthew's Church. This seems particularly ill conceived - how can parents living in Royal Tunbridge Wells North exercise any voting interest in the councilors that would oversee the new ward that the school will be located in? If you truly want to support the school it would make more sense to include Hill Crest in the boundary for Royal Tunbridge Wells North. Better still, retain the relationship between High Brooms and Southborough that the existing boundary provisions.
