I don't think there needs to be 3 Councillors per ward - they're not very visible, I don't know what their budgets are spent on in my ward and it would be much more beneficial to have two per ward, perhaps with an increased budget that can be spent on local projects that will have a bigger impact. This might also encourage them to engage more with residents so that they feel they have a bigger say on how public money is spent on improving their local area. It would be more meaningful to split the wards demographically and allocate the number of Councillors to each ward accordingly, based on the number of residents in that ward.
