I feel there is no pressing need to make any changes to the ward boundaries. It's concerning to see the pattern emerging where (mostly right-leaning, it would appear) parties are proposing changes to the voting systems to fix apparent issues where there are no issues, but where the change clearly works in their favour. Perhaps there ARE innocent and legitimate reasons that I simply can't see here for this, but in the current political climate where it almost seems like policy for norms and standards to be ignored, forgive me if I'm a little skeptical.
