Comment text:

The map does not work. I cannot click on anything. Not a good way of running a consultation. Buckinghamshire Council has a population of about half a million. There should be one councillor per 50,000, that is, 100 councillors. More councillors than that would result in a council that would be unwieldy. Few councillors and very large constituencies would mean local voices would not be heard. I can make no comment on the boundaries because the map does not work and constituency boundaries are not shown. This makes the consultation process a farce.
