Comment text:

These proposals appear eminently sensible and will assist in reducing costs associated with the political representation of the population. However, in my view, these proposals do not go far enough. The majority of residents rarely call on the services of their councillors and many would have difficulty in naming their representatives. The number of electors per councillor should rise considerably which will give councillors a workload commensurate with their allowances. The reduction in councillor numbers would then offer up savings which could either reduce council tax rates, or be used to better recompense councillors without an overall increase in taxation.
