My view is that there should be smaller wards with one candidate. So for instance in a ward with three councillors, it should be divided into three wards and a single councillor elected. Currently it is possible to have a mix of Independent, Labour, Lib Dem or Conservative all serving the same ward and at odds with each other owing to clearly different politics, despite the emphasis on local issues. The number of councillors I think is currently correct for the size of Buckinghamshire and clearly in a unitary council the workload of a councillor is greater as they look after the role of both previous district councillor and county councillor work.
