This is meant to be a "Consultation on new boundaries", but how can the ordinary electorate give its opinion without knowing what new boundaries are being proposed? You state:- "The Commission has not yet proposed any new wards", but our local councillors have given us some details of your proposals. These include that Wavertree Ward is to be cut into two and these new wards will gain some of Belle Vale and lose some of Wavertree. How can anyone be expected to have an opinion and to comment without any concrete information? My pessimistic view is that this is a sham consultation - the important decisions have already been made and this is just a tick-boxing exercise. Hopefully, the second stage of the consultations will be more substantial and prove me wrong.
