I can't see this working where you have less people representing more residents. I feel that in Woolton we currently have a really good representation of Counsellors covering the area, they get involved, we know who they are and this is what counts, we can approach them and discuss things. We need more than 1, it'd be impossible if they took a holiday or we're off on sick leave. Also from what I understand, children living in Woolton may not in theory be in the same district as a school in Woolton? I loved to this area because of the great schools, I'd be disappointed if my Son could then not attend because of these plans. Why split Woolton? Why not have Woolton as one district. It may work out more difficult for counsellors to solve problems when the issue presented is in Woolton but part of another counsellors district.
