I am generally happy with the ward size and no. of councillors representing me. I am unsure why this change is needed for the sake of reducing the total no. of councillors by six. It seems a huge amount of work for very little change. How much will this exercise - from the point of launching the consultation - to the end of implementation - actually cost? It is, in my view, a wholly unnecessary use of public money. I took my son today to a park in Garston, a relatively poor area of the city. At some point over the weekend, someone - probably no doubt disaffected youth - had set fire to the roundabout. There was broken glass and burnt items strewn all around. The entire park is rundown and full of rubbish. I would much prefer whatever money is being spent on this exercise, to be spent instead of investing in public amenities in the most deprived areas of our city. You can tell that to Max Caller.
