

Over the last ten years the condition of Brighton's streets/roads and pavements has dramatically declined to the point where travel for the disabled and elderly is becoming increasingly difficult and dangerous. On top of this the failure to provide even the most basic refuse collection and recycling services has meant the entire city has been turned into a rubbish dump. Street furniture is broken and vandalised - weeds and rotting plant debris blocks drains and destroys pavements. Communal collection bins broken - lids missing and opening arms not functioning. Surely any redrawing of ward boundaries should be done so as to simplify and allow for basic council service provision. Otherwise you are in danger of simply rearranging the deckchairs on the titanic.
