Bargate ward is already the most populous ward, and is predicted to have the greatest growth rising to nearly 17000 citizens in your forecast. As most of the other wards are predicted to only have modest growth in your forecast it would seem logical that the boundaries of Bargate, Bevois and Freemantle need to be redrawn to create a more equitable forecast population spread of 14000 residents per ward. Given that these wards will have approx 3000 residents more than other wards it probably makes sense for them to have an additional councillor. Also i thought that the Major Development Zone (wholly within Bargate ward) for the city over the next 30 years is likely to be the main focus for delivering the projected housing growth, so depending on how long your forecast runs for it maybe that Bargate ward will grow by much greater than the 3000 people you predict which may suggest that Bargate needs to be split into east and west
