this website could be a bit sharper, if it said: a) how many councillors there currently are, b) how many there currently are "per capita" (i.e. councillors per voter) c) how many councillors there would be under the proposed changes "per capita" I guess this is driven partly by population growth, and partly by the disparity mainly between swaythling and bargate? why is the forecast growth for bargate so much higher than for anywhere else in the city? that's an extra 3,000 voting-age people - where is that growth estimate coming from? Has it been independently validated? is the plan still to have wards of 3 councillors? I note that 51 is still a multiple of 3, so I guess this might be the case - would be nice if that was spelt out I have no detailed feelings or preferences on the specifics of how the new boundaries are drawn up, beyond the broad mantra "if it ain't broke don't fix it", i.e. make the minimum changes necessary to re-adjust the wards. overall, if the boundary reworking results in more-or-less the same councillors per capita and similar-sized boundaries, then yes it's a good thing. looking forward to seeing the proposals
