Having previously argued, and obtained, an increase in Councillor numbers, now they argue for a reduction, one wonders why? Could it be that the majority party are finding it increasing difficult to find people willing to stand in elections, having to find fewer candidates will make life so much easier for them. In my view this is simply a cynical attempt to ensure that they can maintain their control of the Council. As argued by the "Resident" comment in the previous consultation round, not only would they maintain their control, but they would increase it. I sat as a Parish Councillor for twelve years, during which time I attended many Borough meetings as a Parish Representative. I do not belong to any political party, not do I wish to belong. This looks like being just another rubber stamp exercise.
