Although I recognise the need to review the boundaries, I think that the suggestion for Hale Central is wrong. The name is fine, but the inclusion of the Welman Way estate is completely wrong and goes against a core tenet of the Boundary Commission, which is that areas should be reflective of the residents who inhabit them. The Welman Way estate is categorically not in Hale and is part of Altrincham. The residents there do not view themselves as part of Hale and never will. Furthermore, the roads to the west of Stamford Park do not consider themselves part of Hale and consider themselves to be part of Altrincham. The historic boundary of Hale runs from Stamford Park Road to Delahays Road, down Hilltop to North Road and down Bankhall Lane. The division between Bowdon and Hale is fine to me, except Hale should include Willow Tree Road and Culcheth Road as they are actually part of Hale Village. I urge you to reconsider the proposal.
