Good morning,

After hearing the news that you would like Grangefield to join with New Town this has brought great concern and I agree with what others have proposed.

When looking to move to this area I would have certainly reconsidered my choice if it was classed as New Town.

Before buying I looked at all options from schooling, health care etc.

All of this had a massive factor on where we wanted to live and raise a family. As boundaries are looked at for these.

From checking that I could still stay in my my doctors which I have been in since a baby and who looked after my mum who sadly passed away. Was a massive factor.

To looking at what school my son could attend and where i would feel confident in him going through his education. Again you have to be in certain catchment areas to bw able to send your children to the school you would prefer.

I feel joining such a large area will only cause bigger issues.

People choose to live in an area that they feel confident in buying a house and raising a family.

I strongly feel this needs to be reconsidered and listen to what people have to say on this
