As long as the ward electorate remains around the 4500-5000 mark with two councillors per ward, then I deem this sensible. Thus Greenlands might be a little reduced by transfer to Warbreck, though maybe your feeling is that the range is 4750-5250. I've read the draft proposals and they read sensibly; I am particularly struck by the attention to community identity, which I applaud. I agree with the general rejection of increased numbers of councillors. That should only change when the rule of thumb of around 2500 residents per councillor cannot be maintained. I am utterly indifferent to party affiliation at a local level, finding that all party taint works against the interests of the residents.
