I can add little to the submission made by the Southborough Town Council on this issue except to say that it makes so much sense in its objections to the proposal to split High Brooms, or parts of it, away from Southborough that I cannot imagine it could even be contemplated let alone be allowed to succeed. To add a few additional thoughts, the High Brooms important historical connection with brick making is incorporated by two of the motifs in the Southborough Town Crest and the organisation which handles the activities relating to the town's twinning with Lambersart in France is the 'Southborough, HIGH BROOMS and District Overseas Friendship Association' and was delighted when Lambersart Close was officially named in the presence of French visitors and the Mayor of Lambersart. In conclusion, the communities of Southborough and High Brooms are inextricably linked historically, geographically, socially, economically and culturally. It makes no sense to change that.
