The area of Gateshead where I live has three councillors. Over a period of years I have needed to speak to one of them for various reasons but have never ever been able to contact them satisfactorily. Requests are ignored or vague responses given that are never followed up. The only occasion where I did receive a response which must be over 20 years ago was when I offered information about damage to council property. I find my area is better served by councillors from the neighbouring area of Low Fell who do respond and follow up queries as well as copying replies from council officers. Therefore I would suggest that if councillors from a neighbouring area are able to deal with their own residents queries and other outside queries then the councillors in my ward are superfluous.
