Related subject: Oxshott

I am a resident of Oxshott, in the same house for nearly 30 years and have only ever felt apart of the Oxshott Community. To arbitrarily divide Oxshott down the main road, and then absorb each part into other parts of Surrey, thus abolishing our name and long history is plain wrong. What is the logic of fixing something that is not broken? The alternative that could work is to combine the three villages of Oxshott, Claygate and Stoke D Abernon which have a common theme of adjacent railway stations, but retain the individual names within the enlarged community.
