It is crazy to shave off part of Stroud town and put in into a different County Council section, ie joining Bisley and Painswick. Currently the Town council and County Council areas coincide, which make for efficient planning and organisation of services. Trinity has vital resources within it, including the hospital, minor injuries unit, and maternity services, which serve the whole town. Also the Holy Trinity church, and Trinity rooms, which are well used by many Stroud community groups. This area is indistinguishable from any other part of Stroud and truly belongs to the town. It has nothing in common with the rural areas of Painswick and Bisley, so placing it into that arbitrary division will mean it will be worse served by its representatives who are likely to focus on the needs of the rural communities and not on the interests of those in the town.
