Splitting Broomfield into two, with one side of the road belonging to Hoath area and the other side remaining where it is, seems pointless. I saw in the comments that splitting an estate in two is considered unwise, so why is this happening here? A better way to balance Herne and Broomfield would be to keep all of Redrow estate together, rather than splitting that down the middle and splitting Broomfield, and put Redrow with Greenhill while Herne and Broomfield retains all of Broomfield. That would then give the Thanet Way as a boundary.

Splitting Broomfield, with knock on effect of making Herne and Broomfield parish councillors representing one side or the other, would be an unnecessary complication.
