I feel that Cheshire East is too large and hence disfunctional. The area offices are concentrated in the south west of the council area, hence a lack of knowlede and focus on areas to the north east. Most, if not all, major projects are focussed towards the towns in the south west. Supporting budgets therefore focus on these areas, ie local road maintenance. As an example, study of 1, I recently travelled over to Leighton hospital. It was amazing to see how smooth the roads were with few if any potholes, this the opposite of my local area, both main and minor roads. A focus across CEC is needed perhaps by area not population. Population only concentrates a council focus on the towns not the whole area and the needs of all, including the smaller areas of housing.

I therefore disagree with population based wards. An alternative might be to a board that is comprised on 'regional' representatives to balance the services which a council should provide.
