I am very concerned that the recent local reorganisation will now result in an increased number of councillors. At what significant cost will this mean for Council Tax payers? I regret that any increase in councillor numbers is highly unlikely to improve representation locally. Since reorganisation all communication on decision making seems to come from Workington, planning decisions are made and considered in Workington, major public meetings are held out of the Carlisle area. I have no confidence that reorganisation has increased any real awareness of small towns or rural areas within the district. I would like to see the detailed costings and impact assessment on these proposed changes. Have they been published?
