I've not yet lived here 2 years but there seems to have been constant change in local government boundaries and titles. Countless questionnaires, surveys, "conversations". At what cost. They appear to be merely box ticking on the part of the councils. Yet the public does not seem to have been asked if they want the mayor that we will have to pay extra council tax for. This latest consultation has far too many downloads to digest. On opening the map and clicking at bottom right as instructed, nothing happened ? There seem to be far too many councillors.

The residents of Penrith have lost faith in their council that have overspent on Voreda House and under delivered. Not even correctly applying for their own planning permission.
