Comment text:

When the ward boundaries were changed last time I was delighted to be moved into the ward that I felt most attached to. It makes sense to join a neighbourhood which I am geographical attached to instead of a far flung outshoot to an urban ward that I share nothing with. My previous councillor couldn't even find my street when invited to come to a meeting. My greatest fear is a future boundary change would move me back to 'no man's land' and with totally disinterested politicians! What say can individuals have before any changes to boundaries are made?
