It would appear that no consideration was given in the proposals to the fact that JRHT built our estate as an entity, with a distinct identity. Although we have no school, shops, etc. this was a deliberate policy in order that we should have meaningful links with the surrounding areas, and not be an exclusive development, and does not mean that we have no unique sense of community, just like Osbaldwick. Indeed, I would argue that we have a greater sense of community because of the ongoing involvement of JRHT with the estate. Our estate isn't mentioned, but it is proposed that we are divided arbitrarily in a manner too reminiscent of the old colonial way of drawing lines on maps from afar. I would have expected that councillors from wards other than Osbaldwick might have walked around here, and got a better understanding of the area than appears to be the case.
