The suggested boundaries are huge improvements on what we have at the moment. The changes divide the city into communities more precisely and follow what seem to me like more natural edges. In particular, the use of trainlines as boundaries makes a lot of sense in Clifton, the Leeman Road area, and Dringhouses, and the use of Front Street, Gale Lane, and Carr Lane make sense to split Acomb because they're natural meeting points - they feel like boundaries.

In addition, merging Fishergate and Fulford is very sensible because they're really overlapping. Putting Woodthorpe and Foxwood together makes sense too because, while they are distinct communities, they're small and share infrastructure and interact with the city more broadly in very similar ways.

There's no ideal way to divide up greater Tang Hall because it overlaps with other communities, but the new Tanghall and Derwenthorpe ward does a good job of lassoing a distinct community, although it would be better if it included all of the Derwenthorpe estate.
