I don't want 40 wards. 20 wards with two Councillors per ward works well - it ensures a degree of: Sharing of expertise & ideas A broader range of expertise & knowledge with 2 Councillors per ward Continuity if one elected member is away or ill Melding of party politics where the 2 members come from different parties discussion and collaboration All of which I believe leads to better outcomes for us the residents than when an elected member flies solo. I consider this to be a waste of time and money when there is so much to do in Cheltenham ... regenerate the town centre, think outside the box and stop the downhill slide (encourage new ideas and businesses and events) , mend the roads, help people cope with the increasing gap between income & outgoings to name very few.
