Liverpool's single greatest problem is the number of safe seats, this means that the election a candidate needs to win is with the local party. This does not produce the best candidates, without some form of open list system to give the voters a genuine choice of who represents them this will have no effect as the councillors will simply making sure they appeal to the local party, which are far from representative of either the local community or even those who vote for the party. This has led in the past to popular and effective councillors being deselected and unpopular ones elected year after year. Primaries are far too expensive a vote for party and then a ranking of the candidates for that party is the only affordable and democratic solution.
