Why are we not being given the opportunity to decide on the electoral cycle, ie moving to all-out elections? All-out elections would solve the problem you are going to have of trying to make 13 x 3 member wards by making that need irrelevant. You will end up with areas that simply don't compliment each other, have very different needs and issues, risk one community disrupting another. If the intention is to improve democracy the tell the Liberal Democrats to stop gerrymandering the elections and move the council to all-out elections. Then you could make 39 single member wards, or broadly keep it as it is with just modest changes to reflect the loss of two councillors. Keeping the cycle in thirds makes this whole process unnecessarily complicated.
