Can't see any reason to have 60 councillors for Wolverhampton. We have had very little sight of most councillors, not just Wolverhampton but across the country of an of them. Decision making has been via internet and contact has been by phone or email. Think average numbers have hardly gone up since last time and is just around 10,000 i think each ward. For the last two years in my ward we haven't seen one of our councillors and she has hardly attended any meetings, even virtually since she defected To another party, therefore two councillors have managed the Ward OK. We should have just 40 councillors and save the money.
